FASHIONS OF YORE as pictured in 1905 issue of Ladies Home Journal Pattern Book, are studied by Mrs. Carmel Hernandez, who was given the souvenir by her mother-in-law.

Old Pattern Book Gives Hints on Fashions of Fifty Years Ago

"Good gowns are cut with circular skirts. The circular skirt is pretty and pliable as are materials this season. It affords snug fitting waist and hip with plenty of graceful fullness about the foot, which is positively essential."

So reads a fashion hint from the Ladies Home Journal pattern book of 1905, a copy of which Mrs. Carmel Hernandez, 20330 Henrietta st. has been given as a souvenir.

"The majority of walking skirts," it continues, "are gored with plaits set in to give fullness at the bottom. In most cases the seams are located under a plait or cluster of plaits, in some just a novelty trimming or band which hides the seam. Many are finished with single or double plaits at the back. Some French models have placket buttoned visible on the left side."

For Stay-at-homes

"Very new," another article reports, "is the seven eighth rain coat, practical for only some women, those who go out only occasionally when it rains and nine out of ten times must wear a good gown. Her gown may be planned up and coat and gown will be well off the ground." A pattern is offered in full length for those who must be out more frequently, and is perforated at the shorter length for the "stay-at-homes."

Girdles Too

"Girdles this season average about five inches high in the back," says another article, "extending from one half to one inch below the waistline. Some of the French models are five inches deep in front. These extend only two inches above the waistline and three below, to give the deep pointed effect."

Hair Styles

"Dame Fashion decrees a change in hair styles," heralds another article. "The prevailing style for fall is a part in the center, worn fluffy and full at the sides, and coiled moderately low in back. Braided in plaits, and then twisted is newer than puffs. This is no doubt why the dainty, little trim sailor we all admire will hold its own for early fall."

Boy's Dresses

"The one piece dress for little boys can not vary much," says another item, "for 'children must be children.'" Patterns illustrated show long sleeved, sailor collared blouses, with dropped belted waist and short skirt.

"Mothers must rejoice over the fact that bloomers for their young daughters will be just the thing for fall and winter" states another. "They are made circular so as to be sufficiently full in order that the little frock will stand away as well as if held out by starched petticoats. Bloomers are really more comfortable and warmer for children for the winter and more economical for mother."

"I'm glad the styles have changed," says Mrs. Hernandez. "Even if I don't care for the sack dress. And I'd sure hate to have to dress my children like that."
